Widgets have been part of Android since day one, and they remain one of the platform's most useful features. These tiny applets that you can place on your home screen are ideal for quick, at-a-glance information like weather updates. Sometimes they have buttons for controlling music or your phone's flashlight. But with so many apps offering cool widgets, how can you be sure you aren't missing out? Here's our pick of the best Android widgets every user should have. Want to keep your home screen uncluttered but still like to have a handy summary of your agenda for the day? You've already got the best widget; you just might not have noticed it. At a Glance is part of the Google app installed on every Android phone. It's a single row, full-width widget that updates throughout the day to show bits of information like traffic or your next appointment. If there's nothing special happening, it becomes a nice date and weather widget. If you prefer a bit more customization, then take a look at Another Widget. It's inspired by At a Glance—and is almost identical in looks—but offers a tad more functionality. Download: Google (Free) Overdrop is one of the most impressive members of Android's ever-expanding weather app genre. It's one of the best-looking and offers accurate minute-by-minute forecasts from a whole range of weather services. It also has a heavy focus on widgets. You get 25 free widgets, plus a further 29 if you upgrade through an in-app purchase. They cover pretty much every style you could think of. If Overdrop doesn't work out for you, take a look at our guide to more of the best weather widgets for Android. You're sure to find something you'll love there. Download: Overdrop Weather (Free, in-app purchases available) Every home screen needs a great-looking clock widget. Chronus gives you a bunch of them. It offers a choice of digital and analog clocks, with added agenda view, weather, stocks, or a news feed. It even has a widget that's compatible with Google Fit, putting your daily steps onto your home screen. You can customize every part of the look and feel of your Chronus widgets. And by downloading some third-party extensions from the Play Store, you can make it even more useful. Once you get your head around how to customize Chronus widgets, they become some of the coolest widgets for Android. Download: Chronus (Free, in-app purchases available) You'll find lots of excellent note-taking apps with widgets in the Play Store. But you can't really beat Google Keep. It offers two widgets. One is a simple shortcuts bar that lets you create a basic note, list, voice memo, handwritten note, or photo note. The other allows you to pin notes to your home screen. It's ideal for shopping lists or anything else you need to remember while you're out and about. Download: Google Keep (Free) While Google Keep has some great note widgets, Samsung users also have access to one of the best Samsung widgets out there, Samsung Notes. The widget options here include a sleek and stylish toolbar, miniature note shortcuts, and a larger full view option. Download: Samsung Notes (Free) Month is a beautiful collection of calendar widgets, with over 90 themes to fit in seamlessly with whatever wallpaper, icon set, or launcher you use. There's something for everyone. You can choose a classy, transparent, full-page Month view or go for a more functional Agenda view suitable for busy professionals. It's fully compatible with Google Calendar as well. Download: Month (Free, in-app purchases available) TickTick is an awesome task management app that comes with a collection of widgets guaranteed to make you a whole lot more productive. They range from a comprehensive multi-page to-do list, to a three-day agenda view, to a basic checklist. There's even a Pomodoro timer widget that will help you cut out procrastination and get more work done. It all ties into an app that's vital for anyone with a busy life. In fact, the app is so good we've produced a full guide full of essential TickTick tips. Download: TickTick (Free, subscription available) A sleek battery widget is one of those widget ideas that you didn't know you needed. A simple battery widget is a must when you need to keep an eye on your phone's remaining charge and can help you to prolong your battery life throughout the day. Battery Widget Reborn is as simple as they come: it's a small 1x1 circle with a number inside it. That number can be either a percentage, or the estimated time you've got left. You can click through for some extra battery stats, too. For those who love a nice graph, Battery Widget Reborn also offers a cool graph widget that allows you to see how your battery life will diminish at its current rate of use. Download: Battery Widget Reborn (Free, in-app purchases available) Flashlights are one of the most notorious categories of Android apps. They're so often packed full of junk ads, and permissions that snoop through your data—or worse. Flashlight Widget is a breath of fresh air. It's free, open-source, has no ads, and requires no permissions. In fact, all it does is drop a little on/off button on your home screen that you can use to toggle your flashlight. And when you think about it, that's really all it needs to do, which is why it's one of the most useful widgets and one of our top widget apps for Android. Download: Flashlight Widget (Free) Spotify, Apple Music, and other streaming services have their own widgets that let you control your tunes without opening the app. But if you prefer to listen to music stored on your phone and you want a great-looking widget to control it, look no further than Musicolet. Not only is it a fantastic music player, with unusual features like support for earphone controls and multiple queues, it also offers a handy selection of widgets. These include basics like the standard music controls with album art, up to a larger option that lets you browse your chosen playlist. Download: Musicolet Music Player (Free, in-app purchases available) Third-party Twitter apps are not always ideal on Android. They lack some of the features of the official app and are limited in how many users they can have. But they're also worth investigating because the official Twitter client does not have a widget. If you want an at-a-glance look at your timeline, to see the tweets from a specific user you're following, or just get shortcuts on your home screen that let you quickly post whatever's on your mind, Albatross is a good option. Alongside those three widgets is a feature-packed app that you can customize to suit how you use the service, and it has also been updated to Android 12's Material You theme. Download: Albatross for Twitter (Free, in-app purchase available) Keeping track of your stock prices is one of the best uses of a widget. Investing.com has a good one as part of its Stock Exchange app. You can search for stocks on over 70 global exchanges and track as many as you like. These automatically get added to your widget, which you can resize to fit a full home screen panel. You can then view real-time price updates. If cryptocurrency is more your speed, Investing.com has an app with a Bitcoin widget, too. Download: Investing.com Stock Exchange (Free, in-app purchases available) These are just some of the best widgets for Android. The chances are that most of your favorite apps offer their own widgets. It's always worth checking, as it's so easy to miss out on some really useful extra functionality in apps you use every day. Gmail, Snapchat, Spotify, VLC, Fitbit, Chrome, and so many more have them. SamSprung (Launcher) Widget Current limitations: Does NOT work with Android 12 / OneUI 4 or firmware with Samsung Health verification. New version at Running apps requires Screen lock type set to None / Swipe in Settings -> Lock screen Bixby unlock can be used as a workaround for other lock types Keyboards will not open on the cover screen and some app functionality is limited Firmware limitation by Samsung - Secondary IME support is disabled Switching apps requires tapping power and waiting for a few seconds to exit the app and widget. The app list, however, can be closed by swiping to another widget or the clock. Samsung Health must be uninstalled to free up the package name for the whitelisted widgets.
